The Canterbury Tales (Middle English: Tales of Caunterbury) is a collection of 24 stories that runs to over 17,000 lines written in Middle English by Geoffrey Chaucer between 1387 and 1400. In 1386, Chaucer became Controller of Customs and Justice of Peace and, in 1389, Clerk of the King's work. It was during these years that Chaucer began working on his most famous text, The Canterbury Tales.

Kansas probably has more frontier trails than any other state, being the jumping off point during westward expansion. In addition to the emigrant trails to the west, including the Oregon, California, and Santa Fe Trails, the Sunflower State also provided a number of military trails which connected the many Old West Forts in the state, as well as cattle trails, such as The Chisholm Trail and ...

It's a Trap! Garrison, who probably believed the "changed motorcade route" story, could hardly know that he was setting a trap for unwary "witnesses" who would, in the future, tell interesting tales about a conspiracy killing Kennedy. The story spread, was repeated in several conspiracy books, and began to circulate among conspiracy-oriented "researchers."

The modern constellation Pyxis, the compass, occupies an area next to the mast, but it is not considered a part of the original Argo. In 1844 the English astronomer John Herschel proposed replacing Pyxis with a fourth subdivision of Argo which he called Malus, the mast, but this suggestion was not widely adopted.
